

The Autumn Budget has now been confirmed for Wednesday 26 November. While rumours continue to circulate, nothing has yet been officially announced. Current trails suggest the Chancellor may focus on revenue-raising measures without altering the headline rates of income tax, National Insurance or VAT.

Potential tax rises

- Property taxes are prominent, including a possible seller levy on higher value homes, and ideas to taper or cap the Capital Gains Tax exemption for main residences.
- Dividend income is in scope, with talk of abolishing the small dividend allowance and adjusting rates.
- Pensions may be targeted through a lower effective cap on the 25 per cent tax free lump sum.
- Inheritance Tax planning through lifetime gifts may be tightened, especially the seven year rule and taper.
- The freeze on income tax thresholds could be extended, which quietly raises revenue as pay increases.
- Anti-forestalling is possible where ministers fear a rush to bank reliefs before any change date.

What this means

- Home sellers at higher prices should discuss timing and valuations.
- Director shareholders should keep remuneration flexible, and be ready with salary, dividend, and pension scenarios.
- Retirees and near retirees should avoid crystallising benefits solely on rumours.
- Families with gifting plans should keep records clear and purposeful.
